Sepia

Sepia is a lounge and restaurant, located in a building dated back to the early 1900s, in the Gemmayzeh district in Beirut. A family once resided in this old house, leaving it to disintegrate over the years. Bachir took on the project eyeing it as a challenge. With Sepia, Bachir sought to keep the room divisions as they were, mirroring the old architectural styles of Lebanese homes.

 Firstly, the initial foyer or meeting room welcomes the guests, and then the separate rooms of the house lead out from the main room. The kitchen, bathrooms, a chimney room and a winery are all represented in the final setting, and lead from the main hall. For each room, Bachir labeled it, for the visitors to know where they are standing. He respected the space and the family which once lived there.

Then, he added an additional element, so as to personalize the setting. Bachir scrawled and inscribed personalized stories and poems on the walls, for the guest to experience a different story and tap into their emotions by reading what the walls held.
